

Step into one of the grandest gardens of Jacobean times, beautifully designed and restored over the years into this magnificent display you see today.

With each season comes a new showpiece, transforming the gardens into a glorious rainbow of colours throughout the year.

Spring brings a sea of vibrant yellow daffodils to the parkland, while the Parterre and Pond Garden becomes embellished with primroses, tulips and hyacinths.

The summer months are a hive of activity with the gardens in full bloom, and the harvesting of freshly grown fruit and vegetables in the Organic Kitchen well under way.

A warm glow of yellows, reds and oranges blanket the trees and flowerbeds through autumn, while a winter wonderland of snowdrops and branch silhouettes descends across the landscape during the winter months.

Whichever season you visit, the gardens will be a spectacle of colour.

Alongside carefully manicured lawns and flower formations, discover the famous Organic Kitchen Garden of Audley End House.

This garden is a magical experience in itself, packed with row upon row of the season's fresh fruit, herbs and vegetables. Spinach, beetroot, tomatoes, apples... the list goes on.

This working Kitchen you see today grows organic produce based on a combination of modern and Victorian principles, even growing produce that would have been popular during this time.
